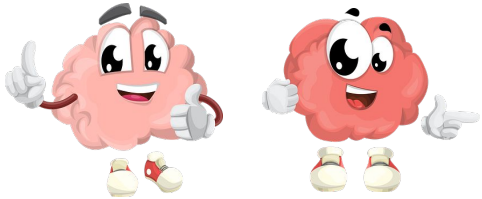
History of Greetings



Greetings have changed over time and vary from culture to culture. In ancient times, people often waved their hands or raised them in greeting to show they came in peace. In ancient Greece, people would greet each other by saying "chaire" which means "be happy."

In medieval Europe, people greeted each other by raising their hats or bowing. This showed respect and politeness to others. In Japan, bowing has been a traditional way to greet others for centuries.

Handshakes became popular in many Western cultures as a way to show trust. In some African cultures, people might greet each other by clasping hands and pulling each other close in a hug.

Today, people greet each other in many different ways. Hugs, handshakes, and verbal greetings like "hello" or "hi" are all ways to greet others. Greetings are one way to show respect and warmth between people all around the world.

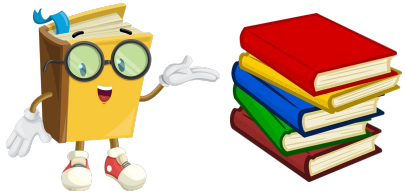
History of Showing Gratitude



Showing gratitude has been valued throughout history as a way to appreciate others. In civilizations like ancient Egypt and Greece, people gave thanks to their gods, believing it would bring blessings and good fortune.

During medieval times, showing gratitude often involved bowing or offering gifts to show appreciation for someone's kindness. These gestures showed respect and acknowledgment of their efforts.

In many cultures around the world, saying "thank you" became a common way to express gratitude. Whether through words, gifts, or acts of kindness, showing gratitude helps create good feelings and strengthen relationships.

Today, showing gratitude is still important. Gratitude helps to create a more positive and caring world where people support and care for each other.

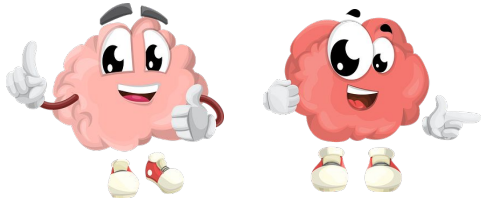
Teacher’s notes



- For this game, you need dice. If you don’t have any - follow the link provided for an online dice roller: Dice Roller.
- The first player to reach the last tile wins.
- Move forward with the roll of the dice. Each time someone falls on a number - they must answer the corresponding question.
- Make sure that your students say as much as possible and use full sentences! Enjoy!
